MAINTAIN SECRECY REGARDING HOOVER PLAN FOR GERMANS

Delegation Refuses to Disclose What President Has Cabled

FRENCH HAVE PLAN TOO

American Scheme is Said to Be Short-Term Credits

By Otto D. Tolischus
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

LONDON, July 21.—With the United States sponsoring a plan to save Germany from bankruptcy for use as a "last resort" if everything else fails, the French delegation to the conference of ministers here today was reported to have formulated a new scheme involving extension of credits to Germany.

While utmost secrecy surrounded the American plan up to an early hour this afternoon, it was learned by International News Service from most reliable sources that it provides for renewable short-term credits to tide over the situation until Germany can obtain a long-term loan.

The American delegation remained adamant in its refusal to disclose the precise terms of the proposal framed by President Hoover over the week-end and cabled to London for presentation to the conference as an emergency move.

Col. Henry L. Stimson, United States Secretary of State and chief of the American delegation, reverted to "army" language when approached and questioned point-blank about the Washington scheme.

"Oh! go plumb to ——," was the only answer he would give.

It was learned however, that the proposal has been framed in such a way as to become operative entirely independent of France. Thus if France is unable to come to an agreement with Germany on political guarantees in exchange for a loan, one avenue of escape will still remain open to Germany from its present grave economic crisis.

The French proposal, which was regarded in financial circles here as somewhat impractical, was reported to provide for a long-term loan of $500,000,000, to be participated in equally by the United States, France and England.

France's share of the loan would be guaranteed by the Government, in return for which Germany would be called upon to agree to the following proposals:

1. Reduction of the military budget.
2. Submission of a political guarantee that the Austro-German Customs Union would remain merely an economic agreement.
3. Definite abandonment of "Anschlussn" or political fusion of Austria and Germany.

NEW HIGH SCHOOL BUILDING AT NEW HOPE REPLACES HISTORIC STRUCTURE; TOWER BELL IS TO REMAIN AS MEMENTO OF THE OLD DAYS

Work Will Be Completed by August 15 — Building Which Was Dedicated in 1851 Was Remodeled Several Times — Will Be Demolished

NEW HOPE, July 21.—New Hope's new high school is fast nearing completion and, according to expectations, will be ready for occupancy when school reopens in September.

The old school on the hill, which in the future will be used only to house the lower grades of the borough, has served the town for the past eight years.

Finishing touches are being made to the new building and the contractor, David D. Nyce, of Doylestown, expects to have the work completed by August 15. Because of the premium at which the bond issue was sold, the school board was enabled to have an additional room made, which will be used as a lunch room. Another extra room will accommodate a commercial class.

In the early days of New Hope, a private school was maintained for children of only the more prominent families. Later, however, it was decided to have a school for all children. Odd Fellows' Hall on Ferry street was used as a school house, the overflow of pupils being taught in Town Hall, a short distance away. Both of these buildings still stand.

In 1849, the Pennsylvania Legislature passed a law requiring a more general and adequate system. As a result, the plain, square building, now one of New Hope's landmarks, was erected on the hill. It was dedicated on June 28, 1851, with elaborate ceremonies. The chief speaker was Stacy G. Potts, of Trenton, a former Supreme Court justice.

Among the first principals of the school were James Robinson, who later took charge of the Lambertville schools; William P. Sharkey, who was named Bucks County superintendent in 1869; Alphonzo B. Sellers and many others.

The school was remodeled and improved several times and one addition was erected before the new portable section. This unattractive frame structure will be sold and demolished.

The old bell in the tower above the historical square school is to remain a memento of those days when it summoned New Hope's boys and girls to their classes.

Lower classes will be held in this building, with the higher grades assembling in the modern structure. Eventually, most residents hope, additional rooms will be placed in the new school for use by the lower grades.

FATHER OF THREE DIES OF ELECTROCUTION

William E. Staley, 27, Fails to Respond to Efforts of Rescue

A NATIVE OF VIRGINIA

The young Bristol man, father of three children, who came in contact with live wires while working along the Lincoln Highway above Oxford Valley, yesterday at noon, is dead.

William Edward Staley, the one whose life his co-workers and physicians battled for hours to save, while traffic streamed past beside them on the thoroughfare, was pronounced dead early last evening.

The grim battle, in which dozens stood by ready to take whatever part they could, ended with Death the victor, while thousands of motorists using the great traffic lane halted briefly to inquire about the injured.

The electrocution occurred at about noon when Staley, 27, of 920 Pond street, who is employed by the Philadelphia Electric Company, was engaged in changing wires from one pole to another. A pole, along the highway above Oxford Valley, had been struck by an automobile the day previous, and snapped in the middle. Yesterday morning employes of the electric company planted a new pole. The tragedy occurred as the wires were being transferred from the old to the new pole. The wires were being passed to Staley, and his right shoulder came in contact with one which was still intact. The Bristol man was seen to slump over a cross-piece, and he was lowered to the ground by men working with him.

Henry Corbett, of Bristol, was with Staley transferring the high-tension wires to the new pole. Edward Kelly and Vincent McGee composed the ground crew.

As the men were working upon Staley, Trooper Hohlefelder, of the State Highway Patrol, passed. He immediately summoned an ambulance which stood by, in case physicians decided to take the man to a hospital.

Inhalators were placed in use, and before many hours passed four were at the scene. From the New Jersey State Police Training School at Wilburtha, N. J., was a man, trained in artificial respiration, sent.

At about 4 o'clock, after several hours of effort, Staley was placed in the ambulance and taken to the substation of the Philadelphia Electric Company, South Langhorne. All efforts to save his life were abandoned at 5.45. The body was later brought to Bristol, where it was viewed by Deputy Coroner W. Furman Young.

A detail of men from the State Highway Patrol headquarters at South Langhorne, kept traffic moving; while the crowd which gathered was ably handled by State policemen from the Morrisville barracks. The officers were plied with questions by motorists who halted as they neared the spot, and many inquired if they could be of assistance.

Staley was a native of Rural Retreat, Virginia. He came to Bristol about five years ago and has been employed by the Philadelphia Electric Company for the past three years.

The survivors are his widow, three children ranging in age from one year to eight years of age; a mother, two sisters and two brothers.

Funeral from the Staley residence will be held Thursday at 2.30 p. m. At St. James's Church a service will be conducted at 3 o'clock. Burial in Bristol Cemetery will be under the direction of the H. S. Rue Estate, undertakers. Friends may call Wednesday evening.

ROBBERY FRUSTRATED BY WOMAN AND POLICE

SEARCH MARSHLANDS

Police had a rather exciting and a warm time early this morning. It was not due entirely to the weather although that was warm enough even for the guardians of the law as they pounded their beats.

The excitement started at about one o'clock when Mrs. Nathan Hoffman, of Hoffman's Cut Rate Store, Mill street, was aroused by a noise at the rear of the Hoffman place of business and residence. Mrs. Hoffman discovered that three men were endeavoring to pry open a screen and thus gain entrance to the store. The trio was working at the rear of the property, which is a dark and secluded spot.

The police were called and Officer Ferry and Stowe went on the run. One entered from the Pond street route while the other took the opposite end of the outlet. The burglars made a hasty run across the foot bridge at the opposite side of the waterway when they were discovered by Ferry.

Officer Ferry commanded the one man, who by this time was the only one to be seen, to halt. The command was not obeyed and the officer fired twice at the fleeing form in the darkness.

More police were called and searchlights brought into play as the officers made a thorough search for the burglars. It is believed that the men waded through the low marshland and made their get-away in the direction of Maple Beach.

HILLTOWN BOARD GETS HEARING AT CO. COURT TODAY

Equity Case Against Directors Involving $110,000 Building to Come Up

LOCATION IS OPPOSED

Taxpayers' Association Objects to Distant End of District

DOYLESTOWN, July 21.—Members of the Hilltown township school board today will have an opportunity to show why they should be permitted to go ahead with the erection of a new $110,000 consolidated high school for that district. There will be a hearing in equity before the Bucks County Court.

At the present time the directors, sustained by one judge in a petition by the Hilltown Taxpayers' Association, but later criminally charged with malfeasance in office and halted in their plan for the erection of a new school by an injunction, are helpless to proceed pending the equity hearing and the criminal hearing. Criminal charges were lodged against them by John Reese, of Hilltown township, and the equity proceeding was begun by W. O. Shull, of the same section.

While awaiting these proceedings to come to a head the Taxpayers' Association is also paving the way for a public audit of the school directors' books, which, it is charged, show certain irregularities that lay the board open to surcharging for expenditures.

The directors have been under fire for the past year, when a special election granted them authority by a scant margin to abandon the fourteen "little red school houses" and erect a modern single building. The site selected was near Blooming Glen, located at one corner of the township, and citizens, unable to make the directors alter their choice and name a more central location, banded into an organization, retained an attorney and conducted a close inspection of the records of the directors.

The result was a petition before the Bucks County Court for the ousting of the farmer-directors, and although this was denied by Judge Shull, of Stroudsburg, sitting on the Bucks bench at the time, the Court censured the directors for alleged carelessness in keeping records and minutes.

The failure of this civil action brought the swearing out of criminal warrants, but the directors, in bail, proceeded with steps in the direction of having the school built on the site of their own selection and which site had been approved by Dr. Lee Driver, of the Department of Public Instruction, at Harrisburg.

The injunction halted this and today will probably see a showdown between the fighting factions. The members of the school board, through their attorney, Mark Thatcher, of Perkasie, plan to show that the Taxpayers' Association is endeavoring to hold up the building operations until after the election, when members of their own group can be placed in office.

Instructor Believes World Deprived of Great Pianist

PHILADELPHIA, July 21.—Fate, in taking the life of a 12 year old boy, who stumbled and fell over a rock and fractured his skull while hurrying for aid for his injured father, deprived the world of one who would have been a great pianist, according to Gilber Raymond Combs, distinguished Philadelphia musician and teacher of Julian Shapiro, of Danboro, Bucks County, who died at Temple University Hospital here Saturday.

He was hurt while running for help for his father, who came in contact with a live wire while repairing a radio and was knocked to the cement barnyard at their home. The elder Shapiro, proprietor of the Danboro Hotel is recovering.

WELFARE COUNCIL REPORTS ON STUDY OF 1700 BOYS AND GIRLS

NEW YORK, July 21—(INS)—Settlements and Neighborhood Houses throughout the country have been watching and waiting for the results of a survey which has been under way in this city. It deals with club life among boys and girls.

The study has been made by the Research Bureau of the Welfare Council of New York, and they announce that the club life among the young folk is little different than that among the older generation.

The Council reports that the study of clubs in 48 settlements and neighborhood houses shows briefly:

That girls are greater club joiners than boys; that it is not always easy to secure admittance even to a boys' or girls' club because in most of them the proposed member must be acceptable to all or a majority of club members; that it is not easy to remain in a club once you have gotten in because your dues of three cents to twenty-five cents a week must be paid regularly and long lists of rules must be observed under penalty of fine or expulsion; that social and athletic activities are most popular and religious or instructive activities least popular; that what is most lacking in these clubs is a sufficient number of adequately trained leaders.

The Welfare Council found some 1700 clubs with close to 30,000 members among the settlements. Jewish, Italian, and Irish boys and girls predominate, but almost every other nationality on earth is represented, many of them in the same club. The only considerable group of the city's population not included in club memberships, the report says, are Negroes "whose needs for recreational and social opportunities are certainly as great as, or greater than, those of any group."

The study of clubs was conducted by Louise P. Blackham and Kathryn Farra of the Research Bureau. This is part of an examination of all activities of New York's 80 settlements which the Welfare Council has made at the request of the United Neighborhood Houses. The findings will be sent to the executives of all settle-

GLOOMY PROPHETS

Pollyanna is in eclipse.

Her smiles are being smothered by the literature of despair that is pouring from the presses. Since the war, the literary market place, the pulpit and the lecture platform have swarmed with prophets of doom. Some modern Jeremiah is constantly telling us we are citizens of a crumbling civilization.

Here are some of the entries in this daybook of despair:

The best families are having the smallest families; we are witnessing the survival of the unfittest; the masters are being mastered by the morons.

The younger generation is running wild, morally adrift without rudder or compass. Family life is cracking perilously.

Suicide is on the increase, grim reminder that modernity has lost the zest for life that healthy civilization always displays.

Murders multiply and crimes of violence grow by leaps. There is a new birth of bigotry. Revolution rides its black horse of envy against the successful and ambitious. Men are depending less on themselves and more on government.

But nobody, not even the disciples of doom, believes the world is headed for the demnition bow-wows. The sore spots have always been present and if they seem sorer now it is by contrast with their much healthier surroundings. Other ages have had their prophets of doom and still pulled through.

PARCELS POST EXTENSION

Interstate Commerce Commission asset to the extension of parcels post limits as to bulk and weight helps the postoffice department out of a hole and effects a saving and convenience for both business and individual shippers.

Through extending the service to larger and heavier shipments, the postoffice department, which lost fifteen and a half millions on parcels post operation last year, expects to add five millions to its revenue without greatly adding to its overhead. Shippers will benefit for obvious reasons.

Deficits render a useful service to both the government and the people when they inspire changes in policy that promise augmented revenue and improved service. And before the postoffice department gets out of the red it will have to make many such changes. One suggests the possibility of others.

Public and private business, it alert, can emerge from the depression better in many ways. When business is good there is no time for thinking up ways and means of extending and improving operations. When there is little or no business the enterprising who offer something a little bit better get what business there is. So it is a promising sign when a governmental agency comes to the fore with innovations.

Some of us can remember when a fellow who was full of ginger wasn't paralyzed from the hips down.

Now some great scientist says the future controls conditions today. He must be paying a lot of instalments.

"MAKE-BELIEVE" by FAITH BALDWIN

Copyright, 1930, by Faith Baldwin — Distributed by King Features Syndicate, Inc.

Travers Lorrimer, shell-shocked son of wealthy Margaret Lorrimer, mistakes Mary Lou Thurston, beautiful orphan, for Delight Harford, whom he claims he married in England during the war. At Mrs. Lorrimer's request, Mary Lou assumes the role of Delight. Complications arise when, after months of happy companionship, Travers insists upon knowing if Mary Lou loves him. She realizes she cannot go on acting, for she has grown to care. At the crucial moment, Larry Mitchell, Mary Lou's newspaper reporter friend, locates the real Delight acting in a revue. Mrs. Lorrimer, favoring Mary Lou, hopes that Delight is not Travers' wife and that she will return to England. After a sleepless night Mary Lou visits Delight. She finds her hardened by life and misfortune. Mary Lou broaches the subject of Delight's marriage.

CHAPTER XLV.

"OUR marriage? He told his people? asked Delight. Her eyes were on the seal ring.

"Yes. Mrs. Lorrimer tried to have it traced. She had agents in London looking for the record of it. They didn't find it. So she never believed it. She doesn't believe it now. And when she learned you had come back—"

"She believed in letting sleeping wives lie, eh?" asked Delight with acidity. She laughed, aloud. The whole business was too fantastic, too like a dream. Lorry? Why she didn't even remember him any more! She had the snapshot, faded, blurred, which she only looked at perhaps once or twice a year. Now and then, when people spoke of wartime, when she had had a good supper and a couple of highballs, she might permit herself to become sentimental about a boy she had once loved and who had died long ago, and bravely.

Mother Love

"He'll have to know the truth," said Mary Lou. "We can't keep it from him, no one can, no one has the right."

"Mrs. Lorrimer had planned to?" inquired Delight shrewdly.

Mary Lou flushed.

"It isn't fair to judge her," she broke out passionately. "She's the most marvelous woman. She has sacrificed ten years of her life to him—if you could have seen him as he was, you'd know! She thinks of nothing but his happiness, his welfare. She—didn't believe in this marriage. She had no proof. Ten years had—changed him—must have changed you. She tried to trace you. She thought perhaps you had died."

"I did, in a manner of speaking," Delight answered, low. "I left London, knocked about, went on the stage. My people died, or were scattered. And, of course, I heard that Lorry had been shot down. That's that, I thought. I was pretty cut up, of course. We'd been terribly in love, nothing but a couple of kids. But I had to get out and earn a living somehow, so I did. How," she asked curiously, "did you go through with it—taking my part, I mean?"

"It wasn't very hard. I've lived abroad. I listened more than I spoke. He made allowances for the changes the years would bring in—in opinions; made allowance too for my forgetting things he remembered," Mary Lou replied.

"I see. How stupid men are!" Delight looked at her and laughed. "You—you're not more than 20; if you're that. About the age I was. He must have thought time had stood still with me. Well, it didn't," she said.

Mary Lou was silent.

Delight had been thinking, hard and fast. So this girl was hired to play a part. The furs and the jewels and the clothes, all a part of her salary! Money. Lots of it. And Delight was, in her own words, broke to the wide. The revue did not look as if it would last a month. The one hit in it, the leading woman, had an offer to go to Hollywood, would probably go. Then what would happen? There wouldn't be a thing for "Diana Hackett" in New York. The stock market had just suffered a panic, there would be few new productions. She'd get her fare to England back and nothing else—and then what?

Time Heals

She was not particularly moved by the story of Lorrimer, faithful to her these 10, 11 years, brooding, longing, wrecked on the thought of her loss, crucified on the cross of his love. She was a very practical woman now; life had made her that. She thought him rather a fool to have gone on caring, dismissed the whole situation, or that part of it, with the tolerant idea that if he'd been well and normal he would have forgotten, as she had forgotten. Here, she saw eye to eye with Margaret Lorrimer, although she didn't realize it.

Money. There must be money in the family. Money meant, not what it had once meant—luxury and laughter—but safety, ordinary protection. Money could buy her shelter, free her from certain sordid necessities. She might even come to the place where she would no longer worry over where her next meal was coming from.

She felt a sudden hatred of this unknown woman, Lorrimer's mother, who, she shrewdly surmised, was entirely capable of never telling the entire truth to her son, of allowing the girl he had loved to go out of the country, alone and friendless, penniless and frantic with apprehension, unknowing that help had been so near.

She didn't want Lorrimer. She didn't want any man. She loved no one, would never love again, she fancied, sitting there, staring at Mary Lou, and listening to her as the soft, husky voice went on, giving chapter and verse, filling in the details, painting a circumstantial picture of the deception.

But she wanted safety. And fate had put an ace in her hands!

"Why did you decide to come to me?" asked Delight abruptly as Mary Lou paused for breath.

"It was fair to you, to Lorry," answered Mary Lou, forgetting formality, and her voice softened a little.

"So—you call him that, too?" demanded the other woman.

"Yes. Because you did. He told me so," Mary Lou replied simply.

"I see. You'll lose your job over this!" Delight commented, with brutal frankness.

"I know. But it had to go anyway. I couldn't keep on with it. Things were getting too difficult, too complicated. On the face of it, it couldn't continue—forever."

Delight nodded. No use in pressing the girl for further explanations. But there was just one thing she wanted to know, must ask.

"He—he believes you his wife?"

Mary Lou nodded.

"Of course."

"But how—?"

Mary Lou was scarlet but she kept her eyes steadily on those other blue eyes, so like and so unlike her own.

"After all," she said, "a great many years had gone by. He was persuaded that I—you—oh, it's so complicated—!"

"I understand. Go on."

"That I had thought him dead; that I couldn't, of course, adjust myself suddenly to circumstances; that I no longer cared very much for him. He was—rather wonderful about it," Mary Lou told her, steadily, "and we made a bargain. If I found that I could not come to care for him he was to permit me an annulment of the marriage."

"I see. No, of course the farce couldn't go on. The comedy had to be played out. Didn't Mrs. Lorrimer realize this, at the beginning?" Delight asked her.

"Yes. But she and Doctor Mathews both felt that when Lorry was strong again and well he could be told the truth—that I was an impostor—and would be able to understand the circumstances which had led to the deception."

"And why hasn't he been told before now, if, as you say, he is entirely well?"

Mary Lou was silent. Delight looked at her and thought she understood. The child had fallen in love with Lorrimer. Well, it couldn't be helped. She was young, she'd forget; the young always forget, mused Delight, out of her wide and hard-bought wisdom.

And Lorrimer—had he, too, fallen in love with Mary Lou? Well, if he had, it was a different situation. It would be because he thought her someone else, someone he had loved for many years.

One Short Week

"What do you expect me to do?" asked Delight, gravely.

"Nothing yet. When Mrs. Lorrimer learns that I have seen you, she will never forgive me. But I must tell her. I think I can persuade her to reconsider, to come to you herself, or to send for you. If not, the matter lies in your hands. It is your affair. And Lorry's. Will you give me a week in which to talk to her, to try and persuade her to my opinion? At the end of that week I shall let you know, one way or the other. If she decides against—us—I'll go, leave the field clear, and you can do as you think best. If she decides for us—well, I'll send you word. Or she will. Can you trust me—for a week?"

Mary Lou rose and stood looking down earnestly at the other woman. Delight got to her feet, held out her hand.

"I'll trust you," she said. "I'm still rather bewildered by it all. I'll wait a week," said Delight, "and meantime—I'd like you to know that you're about as fine a youngster as I've ever met." She laughed, suddenly. "What a comedy it all is!" she said.

Historically Correct Sketches By CALVIN FADER

For more than a century and a half the "Belvoir" of Washington's character forming days -- the "Belvoir" of his ardent youth--has been but a memory. From this site, on U. S. Route 1, below Alexandria, he set out upon surveying expeditions in the Shenandoah Valley at the age of sixteen. Ferrying over the Occoquan River at the right, he soon plunged into forest trails leading toward the Blue Ridge Mountains.

Near "Prince William County Court House of the day", he crossed "Cedar Run", a rock-ledged stream which flows near the village, and came out upon what is now U. S. Route 211 which leads from Washington, D. C., through Warrenton to New Market, Virginia.

CLASSIFIED ADS BRIDGE THE GAP BETWEEN WANTING AND HAVING

Forecast Olympic Triumph

By HARDIN BURNLEY

© 1931, King Features Syndicate, Inc., Great Britain rights reserved.

THOROUGH as well as cursory examination of the records made at the National A. A. U. track and field championship, held in Lincoln, Neb., on or about the Fourth of July, plainly show that the United States will be an overwhelming favorite to win the quadrennial Olympic games next Summer at Los Angeles. Only in the distance runs and two or three field events would foreign competition seem to have more than an outside chance.

Strong as Uncle Sam has been in all previous Olympics (the U. S. has won them all since their modern inception at Paris in 1896), the margin of victory should be greater than ever next year if present form is maintained or bettered by most of those who made the 1931 A. A.U. meet so memorable.

Just think of it—Jess Mortensen, returning from retirement, broke the world's decathlon record with a truly amazing total of 8,177.463! That is 1,212.63 better than the high mark of Finland's Paavo Yrjola made at the 1928 Olympiad in Amsterdam! He beat Wilson "Buster" Charles and Clyde Coffman, both of whom made excellent scores in the gruelling 10-event classic. At that, Mortensen is not rated as the best of Uncle Sam's decathlon marvels. Barney Berlinger, of Penn, has that distinction, though he neither made "place" nor "show" at Lincoln. "Juggernaut Jim" Bausch, another 10-event titan, experienced a like fate there. All mentioned, however, loom as most excellent Olympic prospects.

It would talk at least half a page to detail the other great athletic feats achieved at Lincoln. Percy Beard, of the N. Y. A. C., with 14.2 seconds, broke the world's record for the 120 high hurdles; Frank Wykoff equalled the best ever—9.5—in the 100-yard dash; Eddie Genung, of Seattle, set a new senior record (1:52.) in winning the half-mile; and Bob Maxwell did likewise with 23.5 for the 220 low hurdles.

Those mentioned are but the highest lights of this two-day competition featuring most of America's ablest track and field wonders. What was done there will have much influence in the selection of the U. S. Olympic team.

Anyone can guess it—Uncle Sam seems to have enough material for five or six Olympic winning track and field teams.

Charged ads will be received by telephone, and if paid at the Bristol Courier office within seven days from the first day of insertion, cash rates will be allowed.

Ads ordered for three or six times and stopped before expiration will be charged for only the number of times the ad appeared, and adjustment made at the rate earned.

THOSE REPEAL ATTEMPTS

To the Editor of the Public Ledger:

Sir--The Public Ledger of this morning says that State Senator James Boyd from Montgomery County told the Women's Organization for Prohibition Reform that "the majority of men in America are opposed to prohibition." A recent issue of the Christian Century summed up the record of State Legislatures in the following paragraph:

"Just to keep the record straight, because so much of the daily press fails so conspicuously to do so, it is worth noting that prohibition repeal bills in some form or other met defeat during the sessions of 1930-31 in the Legislatures of California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Iowa, Indiana, Missouri, New Jersey, Ohio, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Utah and at the hands of a Governor's veto in Illinois. There are some interesting names in that list. Even two States that refused to ratify the Eighteenth Amendment are there. New Jersey also, where all wet bills and resolutions died in committee, despite Senator Morrow's campaign, is worth thinking about. Referenda on repealing State prohibition laws were defeated in the Legislatures of California, Indiana, Missouri, Nebraska, New Jersey, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Washington. Resolutions asking for a constitutional convention to repeal the Eighteenth Amendment were introduced and defeated in New Jersey, Ohio, South Dakota and Wisconsin. (Yes, Wisconsin!). Bills legalizing beer, wine and other liquors were introduced and defeated in the Legislatures of Alabama, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Nebraska, Rhode Island, South Dakota and Washington. A total of forty-two States took action either to sustain or strengthen some aspects of their liquor laws."

If Mr. Boyd's statement were true, one would naturally expect to find its expression in the actions of the recent sessions of the State Legislatures.

G. L. SCHALLER.

Harrisburg, Pa., June 13, 1931.

JACK SHARKEY PLEASED AT SCHMELING VICTORY; PREDICTS HIS BOUT WITH WALKER WILL DRAW BIG

By LES CONKLIN
(International News Service Sports Writer)

NEW YORK, July 21.—Interviewing Jack Sharkey is always an intriguing assignment, for one never knows in what mood the temperamental tar will happen to be.

While I was interviewing the Bostonian last winter, he sent me spinning half way across the room in playfully demonstrating a punch he was perfecting. So it was somewhat in a spirit of trepidation that I visited the tar recently at a hotel here just before he began training for his fight with Mickey Walker.

Sharkey, however, was in an unusually amiable mood. By way of a final "spree" before beginning the arduous training grind, he had just attended three consecutive moving picture shows during a six-hour stretch.

At the moment he was starting out on a "shopping spree" at a nearby haberdashery store and I tagged along, asking questions while Jack was dodging automobiles and making purchases.

"In a way I'm glad Max Schmeling stopped Stribling," commented Jack, "for now he will be a much better drawing card if he fights me. We might draw as much as a million and a half."

Jack then stopped talking of millions long enough to ascertain the cost of a pair of suspenders.

"How much for these?" he demanded.

"Seventy-five cents," purred the salesman.

"Du bist mishugu im kopf (crazy in the head)" roared Jack.

"He knows more Jewish than I do," commented the salesman admiringly.

Sharkey took the suspenders.

I unobtrusively made a notation on the reverse side of my writing pad where I thought Jack wouldn't see it, but the eagle-eyed tar wasn't missing a thing.

"What's that you're writing?" he demanded.

I tried to stall, but it was no use.

"Show me that or I'll tear up all your notes," roared Jack. Turning over the pad, he read the notation "argued over price of suspenders."

I expected the interview to end right there, but Sharkey passed over the incident with a grin and continued:

"Max was credited with a technical knockout over Stribling, but I don't think Referee George Blake should have stopped it with only fourteen seconds to go. Strib had been floored only once and a fighter should be allowed to take a couple of knockdowns, at least.

"I picked Schmeling to win, though, because your average American fighter, regardless of condition, worries too much over the length of the fight instead of being supremely confident of his own ability. He thinks too much of the distance instead of thinking about beating the other fellow."

Sharkey snorted when I ventured to point out that some experts were rating him under Schmeling because Max had stopped the Georgian, something that he (Sharkey) had failed to do.

"I might have done the same thing to Strib if our fight had been scheduled for fifteen rounds," he said. "As it was, Strib was cut up badly at the end of the tenth."

I asked Jack if he thought Schmeling would have possibly come on to outpoint him in their fight here thirteen months ago, had the fight not ended in the fourth round with Schmeling the winner on a foul.

"Ridiculous," was the sailor's reply. "When a guy has been doing nothing but catch punches for four rounds, it's silly to say he was coming on. If it hadn't been for that foul rule, Max would have been groping in the dark and the referee would have had to stop it.

"That was the night I had picked to show the American public my true fighting ability, and that was just what I was doing until an unfortunate foul ruined it all."

Sharkey predicted that his bout with Walker would outdraw the Schmeling-Stribling championship bout at Cleveland by a wide margin.

At this juncture the sailor turned to the haberdashery salesman and queried:

"How do you like this Panama I'm wearing."

"How much did you pay for it?" parried the salesman.

"Five bucks."

"You got stung, Mr. Sharkey."

"The joke's on you, you chump," roared the sailor, shaking with mirth, "I bought it here yesterday."

Highly pleased with this naive sally, Sharkey ended the interview with a friendly good-bye and strode forth into the traffic.

WHIFF OF GOOD CIGAR SOOTHES BURKE'S NERVES WHEN THEY INCREASE IN TEMPO DURING GOLF GAME

By JAMES L. KILGALLEN
(International News Service Sports Writer)

NEW YORK, July 21.—A whiff of a good cigar—or a cigarette, for that matter—is a distinct and soothing help to a man's "game" in golf, particularly if he is engaged in a nerve-trying, competitive battle. Of that I am convinced after having been eye-witness to that epic struggle at Inverness between Billy Burke of Greenwich, Conn., and George Von Elm of Los Angeles which resulted in Burke winning the 1931 National Open Championship.

Whenever Burke's nerves began to increase their tempo, he would cooly pause, draw forth a nice big fat cigar, light it, and enjoy a few luxurious puffs. Then he would hand it to his caddie to hold, take forth a club, study his lie, take his stance and—whang!—there would go his mashie mid-iron (if that happened to be the shot he was playing) dead for the pin.

Burke knows how to smoke a cigar. Calmly, slowly, almost nonchalantly. Much will be written about the Burke cigar. It may become as famous as Vice President Dawes' underslung pipe. For it isn't the habit of golfers to smoke cigars on the links. The orthodox thing is a cigarette or a pipe. They may even name a cigar after Burke now.

Von Elm smoked cigarettes throughout this historic struggle—the greatest golf match staged in the long history of golf. George would take a few puffs, toss the cigarette away, and take his shot.

Sometimes he would go six or eight holes without a cigarette; again, when the going would get rough or he was put in a tight spot, he would smoke incessantly, especially when he neared the greens.

Burke seems to be the first open champion to smoke cigars in a big tournament rather than the inevitable cigarette. Chances are cigar smoking on the links will grow popular, among the pros as well as the run of mine, everyday type of golfers.

A few minutes after Burke won the national open with a total of 589 strokes against Von Elm's 590 after they had topped the regulation 72-hole championship proper (they had tied with 292) with two 36-hole play-offs, he was handed a pen by a friend and asked to autograph a score card.

"Nervous?" the friend asked as Burke took the pen.

"Not at all," smiled Billy.

And he stretched his arm at full length. There wasn't a quiver. Burke lit another cigar and smiled.

Welfare Council Reports On Study of 1700 Boys and Girls

ments and it is expected that they will greatly influence their future activities. Some settlements have already made a number of changes as the result of situations disclosed as the study proceeded.

The study revealed that children begin joining clubs in large numbers when they are 8 to 11 years of age and remain active members until they are 16 to 19 years. The life of the average club, however, is only one or two years, although many have been in existence five years or more. New clubs are being formed as rapidly as old clubs disband.

Miss Blackham and Miss Farra found that twice as many girls as boys belong to clubs, especially in the early teens, that 60 per cent of the girls' clubs had programs involving instruction of some sort but only 15 per cent of the boys wanted instruction and that while 58 per cent of girls' club programs dealt with health less than 30 per cent of the boys' clubs were interested in health information. On the other hand 90 per cent of the boys' clubs go in for athletics as compared to 42 per cent of the girls' clubs.

A surprisingly small amount of music was reported by club leaders, and at 44 club meetings visited by the field staff little music was heard.

As typical of the regulations which young club members impose upon themselves the report cites the following cryptic decalogue in one of the boys' clubs:

1. Majority rules.
2. All members must show true Club Spirit.
3. No member shall be allowed to speak slang in the club room.
4. Any member who does not pay his dues within a month's time shall be put out of the club and shall not receive any money back.
5. Any club member ringing the door bell just for fun may be fined by any of the investigation committee.
6. No smoking allowed on the streets or steps of the settlement.
7. Any member caught gambling (cards, treasure hunts) shall be suspended from club activities for two weeks.
8. New officers shall be elected every 2 months.
9. If the club desires to put any member out of the club that member may be impeached and reasons for his dismissal discussed at one meeting but final vote shall not be taken until the following week.

Summarizing the significant accomplishments of girls and boys clubs in settlements as reported by the leaders of those clubs the Welfare Council's report lists: "practicing cooperation," "developing respect for others," "improving manners," "learning the technique of working with others," "building up friendships," "developing character," "promoting good times," "extending knowledge," and "promoting physical development."

Commenting on the fact that only a handful out of 145 club leaders listed crime prevention among the accomplishments of these clubs, the report says: "It is refreshing to find so modest an attitude on the part of settlement club directors when so many organizations are claiming so much in the prevention of juvenile delinquency." Nevertheless the report tells of instances in which street gangs were taken into settlements as a body and gradually converted into peaceful and wholesome clubs.

Explaining the reasons for the study, the report cites John Dewey's statement that "A clique, a club, a gang, a Fagin's household of thieves, the prisoners in a jail, all provide educative environments for those who enter into their collective activities as truly as a church, a labor union, a business partnership or a political party." The study, therefore, sought to discover the kind of educative environment settlement clubs furnish the young people of the city.
